Single Mom Vs. Bad Dad & the U.S. Family Court Freida Wright

The last resort for American parents in conflict is the U.S. Family Court. Many women find that although they leave their partners to make a better life for their children, the problems they faced in their relationship – alcohol abuse, drug use and domestic violence – follow them and continue to negatively affect their family. Sadly, the family court doesn't just fail to protect these women, it also punishes those who fight the hardest for their cause. And what we're left with is a system that ultimately fails the one thing these mothers trust it will defend—their children. Don't believe it? Look inside to discover what single moms are up against when they face a bad dad in the U.S Family Courts.
